MEDIA ADVISORY

Center for Intergovernmental Partnerships to Release and Discuss White Paper on Modernizing the Delivery of Public Benefits

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The National Academy of Public Administration’s Center for Intergovernmental Partnerships (CIP) will release a white paper on the need to modernize the delivery of public benefits and co-host a June 15 panel discussion of the paper with the project sponsor, the Center for Accountability, Modernization, and Innovation (CAMI). Registration can be found here.

The white paper sets out a framework where practitioners at any level of government can take specific actions to improve program outcomes, process delivery, and program effectiveness. It captures key takeaways from a series of roundtables that brought together partners and practitioners to discuss opportunities to modernize the system. The event will feature several participants in that series, offering insight into the necessity and opportunities for modernization. Audience Q&A will take place after the panel discussion concludes.
